Golf Shop

Last week we spoke about how you can minimize hooking and slicing the ball off the tee and how you should consider looking at the flex, loft and length of your driver. This week we'll be looking at how the correct loft of your driver and fairway woods plays a role in optimizing your driving distance and fairway approach shots.

When you are using your driver off the tee, you want to hit a higher shot with less spin in order for the ball to carry further and roll out more. If you hit the ball too high, there will be too much spin on the ball and it will stop quicker. With your approach shots to the green with your fairway woods you want the ball to stop quickly, therefore more spin is required. If you struggle stopping the ball on the green with your fairway woods, you might want to consider getting a higher lofted fairway wood that offers more spin.

To see whether you have got the best driver and fairway wood suited for your game in the bag, stop by the golf shop and let the guys get you sorted.

Feel the thrill

Don't leave potential behind

The reason we're able to add so many yards to our golfers' tee shots, is the amount of potential they leave behind even after making great contact.

There's a different launch DNA for each golfer that maximises potential.

What's the clubhead speed you generate?

What's your angle of attack?

What's the flex on your driver shaft?

What's the loft on your driver?

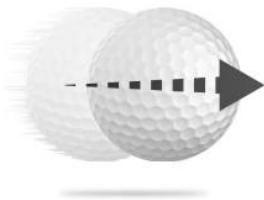

Now it's time to "tune" your performance.

Can we change your angle of attack? How do we influence the amount of spin you create?

What is the launch angle that works best for you?

Ball speed

Launch angle

Spin rate

We're delivering thrills

Creating the perfect match of ball speed, launch angle, and spin rate, maximises the distance you'll get off the tee. A change of just 1° and 500rpm can unlock 20 yards. How much potential can we unlock for you? Act now.

Improvements everywhere

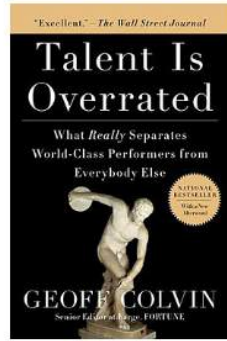

The new Z-STAR is soft and "feels" great. It goes further. You will generate more spin, making you a short game wizard. The ball lasts longer. Srixon's new Z-STAR does it all.

How good could you be?

Make the most of any practice

Last week, we introduced you to Geoff Colvin. He has a theory about "Deliberate Practice". This isn't about beating balls until your hands bleed. It's about making the most of any time you practice.

Colvin recommends identifying a skill you want to acquire, or particular golf shot you want to master. There are then two sorts of very deliberate practices on the way to mastering the skill or shot in competition.

Let's say you're trying to become a master of the 40-yard pitch-shots that stops quickly.

Block practice

While developing the ability to repeat the movements that will create a consistently controlled and measured 40-yard pitch shot, you will hit shot after shot, until you're comfortable.

Random practice

On the course, you'll need to play this shot at random. So create that in practice. Hit different golf shots, similar in sequence to a real golf game. Tee shot, approach, short (40 yards) pitch.

Start your journey. We want to help.

Why don't you give "Deliberate Practice" a try? Start with an Assessment. Let's agree on a particular skill to be improved. We'll teach you the correct technique. We'll give you the practice program. We'll check in every week with feedback. After two weeks, let's test your new skill. How good could you be?
