3 steps to better par 3s Go the distance

You want to give yourself the best chance of hitting the green on every par 3. But so many golfers lower their odds by selecting a club that gets them to the flag with a perfect strike.

Do you know exactly how far you hit every club in your bag? If not, let's get on the range and find out.

Know your numbers >

Step 1:

Smarter club selection

Select a club that, when hit really well, gets you to the back of the green. Your average ball strike likely gets you to the middle, and even a less than perfect strike has a chance of making it to the green. If there's trouble behind, take the club that gets you to the middle on a good strike.

Many par 3s are in the long iron to hybrid distance. Course designers do this to test your long-distance approach play. Here's where hybrids can change your game. Rather than struggle with long irons, why not learn to hit a hybrid from the tee and the fairway?

Improve your par 3 performance

What area of your game could we improve to help you lower your average score on par 3s?

Breaking 90

Staying in play

Previously we talked about building a strategy for each hole back from the centre of the green. How do you get to a place that within an easy wedge distance (we said 70 metres, but you decide what that is)? And how do you plan to use up to 36 shots over 18 holes, getting to that distance on each hole?

THE TEE BOX

"If you missed our shot breakdown of the strategy previously, then"

"On this 365-metre hole, you now have 2 shots to get within an easy wedge distance of the centre of the green. Plan a journey with club selection that is going to keep you in play. Now your swing thought is all about 'making a good swing', not how far you can hit it."

Turn 'thought' into execution

If, without the pressure of hitting the ball as far as possible, your swing still delivers wild and erratic results, then let's fix that. Let's provide you with some simple swing mechanics to allow you to keep the ball in play with the longer clubs.
