Technology is making it easier

Golfers shooting in the 90s and 80s average between 200 and 220 metres with their driver. All the golfers in this category could add up to 20 metres to their drives (without losing accuracy), thanks to the larger hitting zones of modern drivers.

These larger hitting zones are making it easier to increase your smash factor. To find out why that matters for distance,

| Go longer AND straighter

Combine the larger hitting zone on a new driver with the correct head type and shaft for you, and it becomes so much easier to find more fairways and extra metres off the tee. Let's make this a reality for you.

Built for women golfers

The new XXIO 12 Ladies' Irons and Hybrids are specifically designed to help women golfers get more clubhead speed and distance out of their swing speed.

Why strength isn't optional

When your body is strong and conditioned, you'll play better golf, reduce your injury risk and also add up to 24% clubhead speed – according to the British Journal of Sports Medicine.

If you commit to an 8-week conditioning programme, with as little as two days a week that focus on power and flexibility exercises, you'll significantly increase clubhead speed and shot distance.

From strength to strength

With the correct strength training you can lower your handicap and increase your clubhead speed, making your ball go further. Let's check your progress with an assessment before and after 8 weeks of consistent strength training to see if you can get your clubhead speed up by over 24%!

If you engage in these exercises, you agree that you do so at your own risk and assume all risk of injury to yourself.
