Mind your gaps

How do you view your set?

When you look at your set of clubs, between sand wedge and fairway wood, there should be a consistent club length of distance between each club. In this way, you're approaching your set as a group of distances. Are there any gaps in that set for you?

Let's find out

The reason for these gaps often lies in a fitting mismatch between you and your equipment. During a fitting, we'll make sure that elements like shaft flex and length, and lie angle and swing weight are right for your setup. As little as an hour with us can help you fill any distance gaps and add more joy to your game.

Fill the gaps

Skill level doesn't matter. Every golfer should be using a set of clubs that makes the game easier and more enjoyable. Let's make sure you are.

Some ticks matter more than others:

- ✓ Very, very FORGIVING
- ✓ Very FAST FACE
- ✓ Easier to SQUARE the face
- ✓ Fatter shots still have SPEED & POWER
- ✓ Shorter irons focused on CONTROL & ACCURACY
- ✓ MORE DISTANCE with every club
- ✓ Recognised on the GOLF DIGEST 2022 HOT LIST
- ✓ IMPROVES most of our golfers' APPROACH PLAY
- ✓ Makes the game so much more REWARDING

Know your distances

Regulation isn't one size fits all

Hitting a green in regulation (GIR) means you're on the putting surface in two shots less than par on a hole. But GIR is based on a scratch golfer's expected performance. So, if that's not you, a much more useful benchmark of your game is "greens hit from inside 100 metres" (think of this as your scoring zone).

By narrowing the focus to greens hit from inside your scoring zone, we get a benchmark of your short-game performance. That gives us a good entry point to improving your playing experience.

This week's benchmark

Track the number of shots you take to hit the green when inside 100 metres.

If your average over 18 holes is more than 2 shots, we've got a massive opportunity to improve your playing experience and score.

Knowledge is power

The more we know about your performance from specific distances, the more focused we can be in your improvement process.
